

Global Leadership Professional GLP Designation Program

In continuing its mission of providing unparalleled educational opportunities for the business travel professional, the NBTA Foundation has partnered with The Wharton School to create the Global Leadership Professional (GLP) designation. The GLP designation will build upon the principles of the existing GLP program. The GLP program, the industry's only master's-level course, is offered through a partnership between the NBTA Foundation and the University of Pennsylvania's Wharton School.

The GLP designation is intended for those who have completed the GLP coursework and received their Certificate of Professional Development. The designation program is designed to expand upon that knowledge base through project-based work. To earn the GLP designation, participants will work in teams on an industry-related project. The designation program will include a two-day session in which groups are established and topics are determined, two web-based virtual classrooms, one-day session mid-term and an executive de-brief prior to presentation. The results of each group's project will be shared with the business travel community during an education session at the NBTA International Convention & Exposition.

The NBTA Foundation is now accepting application for the 2010-2011 program. The program will begin at the 2010 NBTA Convention in Houston and conclude at the 2011 convention in Denver.

The investment to participate in the GLP designation program is $5,000 and can be split over a two year period. Wharton will issue Continuing Education Units (CEUs) for this program, which may qualify participants for their company's tuition reimbursement program.
