The COVID-19 pandemic has accelerated changes across the payments ecosystem, but perhaps none has been so profound as consumers’ need for touchless payment. This appetite, teamed with the increased adoption by the merchants has driven a seismic shift of the development of contactless cards, digital wallets, and remote payment options globally. Could this be the catalyst for innovation the corporate world needed to replace its inefficient traditional processes? While many employees in the short term are not buying lunch at the office or expensing their travel costs, they are still faced with the question of how to pay for the tools they need to transform their homes into an effective office environment.

How could flexible payment options aid the confidence of those looking to begin traveling again? Join our panel to learn how businesses are adapting to fulfill the increasing requirement for dynamic payment approvals and real-time controls fit for the future.
